The Results Are In

Last month Hunter-Wolff Gallery hosted its first Juried Student Art Show judged by Regional Artist Chuck Mardosz. Many works of art by the 16-21 year olds who participated were sold prior to the show opening and during the two weeks on exhibit. On Friday evening, June 7, awards were presented to nine student artists excited to hear their name called while the jammed-packed gallery waited in silence.

Certificates, cash prizes and sponsor gifts were awarded by Sharon Wolff with a very enthusiastic audience applauding each recipient. Everyone was smiling and having a wonderful evening on this special night. The grand prize went to first year college student Karissa Gonzalez-Othon who is studying art at Fort Hays State University in Hays, Kansas in preparation of an art career. The following received recognition, monetary awards and gifts:

Best in Show - Karissa Gonzalez-Othon for “Gilberto” earned $500 cash award
First Place - David Yarger for “Springtime” earned $450 cash award
Second Place - Kayla Liller for “Team of Four” earned $350 cash award
Third Place - Bailey Black for “A Cure for Strangers” earned $250 cash award
Sponsor Award - David Yarger for “The Greetings” earned $100 cash award
Honorable Mention - Melanie Reis for “Threaded Veins” earned $50 and Glaser Frame
Honorable Mention - Masha Polykarpova for “Mooska” earned $50 and Glaser Frame
Honorable Mention - David Yarger for “Rampart in Rhapsody” earned $50 and Glaser Frame
People’s Choice - Bailey Black for “A Cure for Strangers” earned $50 cash award

*Marlene Kort will paint a small painting each hour beginning on the hour and each will be sold for $150
The journey begins when a tiny tree seed finds its way on a windy day and settles to take root. The lucky ones reach full maturity in spite of adverse weather and environmental conditions living a long life before given a second life in the hands of Vinny Luciani. It might take hundreds of years before that seed completes its full journey. But then, if it is really lucky, it gets a second chance as an art piece.

How does a dead tree get its second life? Colorado woodturner Vinny Luciani, a highly skilled turner, gives new life to trees that have fallen at the end of their cycle. His creative mind and skillful hands are always busy creating extraordinary collectible objects d’arte. He starts on his lathe where a form takes shape before it is hollowed. He then skillfully hand carves unique elements and detail for added interest. The first step in turning keeps the wood moving at anywhere from 500 RPM to a maximum high speed of about 4,000 RPM to cut and shape. Many intricate shapes and designs can be made by an expert turner like Vinny using the correct tools.

He selects primarily figured hardwoods like alder, ash, box elder, mahogany, hard maple, mesquite, cherry, walnut, and hardwood burls. Vinny selects stock that is spalted and rich with beautiful grains and patterns. Burls are also favored for their dramatic patterns and are sometimes combined with different woods that he ebonizes or dyes with color, and lacquers for a silky polished look and drama.

Be sure to visit Vinny Luciani’s work in person to feel the wood that is certain to result in a smile on your face. And, yes, we even expect you will bring a piece up to your nose to inhale the scent of the wood.
If you take the time to ask, you will learn that many successful artists chose their art careers because another artist directly or indirectly inspired them. For instance, one of Hunter-Wolff Gallery’s artists, Clifford Bailey, was inspired by a famous artist by the name of Eyvind Earle (1916-2000). Clifford was a teenager when he met Earle. I suspect that Earle would be thrilled to know that his life as a fine artist had an enormous impact on the art world, and especially on a young Ohio boy, who today continues to pay homage to him.

That 14-year-old boy who Earle inspired more than four decades ago became a highly successful and widely collected artist too. Can you imagine having that kind of impact on so many in the art world and learning you that your actions influenced a successful, dedicated artist with an impressive following?

Shortly after Clifford joined Hunter-Wolff Gallery, another little boy who was visiting with his mom saw Clifford Bailey’s paintings. I remember thinking that the look on his face was perhaps the same look on Clifford’s face when he first examined Eyvind Earle’s paintings. Young Jacob’s proud mom quickly presented an image of her son’s painting on her cell phone to show how talented he was. He was clearly gifted and may someday hang his paintings in a gallery too. He left the gallery with information about his new favorite artist from Hunter-Wolff Gallery and was delighted about what he had learned from his visit. It is possible that one day we will learn Jacob is a successful artist and claims to have been influenced by Clifford Bailey’s paintings. We can only hope. I could see in his eyes that he was soaking up the information I shared and sensed he wanted to run out the door to start his next drawing or painting to be like the artist he admired.

One of my favorite Walt Disney’s quotes is worth sharing, “If you can dream it, you can do it.”

It takes a dream and it helps when those we admire inspire us to follow our dreams. Who will you inspire to follow a dream today?

You could be the person who makes a difference in the life of a young, budding artist.

Do It Today: plan an outing with your kids to enjoy art events, galleries and museums and inspire them to dream ... and do it now.
