

Hunter-Wolff Gallery, Ltd.

Some gallery owners have a sophisticated aesthetic sense and an eye for talented up-and-coming artists. And some are astute business people. What's far too rare is to find a perfect blend of the two. Sharon Wolff, owner of Hunter-Wolff Gallery at 2510 W. Colorado Ave. comes from a corporate business background so she understands business, marketing, and most importantly customer service. But from the looks of her new, larger, gallery space she also has an exceptional eye for talent across a range of media that is surprising in Colorado Springs.

At Hunter-Wolff you'll find exquisite works of bronze sculpture next to displays of Raku pottery next to walls of original art. Her new space allows for larger, more complete displays of some 35 artists. Most of these artists show at other prestigious galleries across the country and at Hunter-Wolff you not only get to see their recent work but you get to buy their art at a price that reflects the Colorado Springs and not a New York, Los Angeles or Santa Fe economy.

"We moved to this expanded space on March 1," says Wolff, "and I've been amazed by the response by both our loyal customers and by the people who have just walked in." While most of Wolff's customers are local, repeat buyers, she does get good walk-in traffic because of her Old Colorado City location. "I've shipped art, and even glass to every state in the continental United States," she says. They've also added four new artists and now have room to display some very unique handmade furniture.

One of the reasons customers love Wolff so much is that she regularly goes the extra mile. For example, for one business client she hung original art in his restaurant that perfectly matched his décor and ambience. For other clients she visits their home and finds them art that complements their personalities and sense of design.

But to really appreciate what Hunter-Wolff has to offer, stop in and see for yourself. For more information visit their website at www.hunterwolffgallery.com or call 719-520-9494. —MG
